Becoming the First Native Woman in Space

Wailacki Nicole Mann readies to make history

By Jourdan Bennett-Begaye
newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

Nicole Aunapu Mann will be making history as the first Native woman to fly into space this fall.

Mann, enrolled in Wailacki of the Round Valley Indian Tribes in northern California, will be aboard the SpaceX Crew-5 mission to go to the International Space Station no earlier than Sept. 29. (The Wailacki's ancestral territory lies along the Eel River east of that of the Sinkiyone people, and southeast of those of the Mattole and Wiyot.)

"It's very exciting," she told Indian Country Today, referring to being the first Native woman in space. "I think it's important that we communicate this to our community, so that other Native kids, if they thought maybe that this was not a possibility or to realize that some of those barriers that used to be there are really starting to get broken down."

This is NASA's fifth crew rotation flight as part of the agency's Commercial Crew Program. As mission commander on the SpaceX spacecraft called Dragon, Mann is leading all phases of the flight from launch at NASA's Kennedy Space Center in Florida to re-entering the Earth's atmosphere. She will also serve as the Expedition 68 flight engineer on the space station.

Three other astronauts will also be on the Crew-5 mission: NASA astronaut Josh Cassada, JAXA astronaut Koichi Wakata, and Roscosmos cosmonaut Anna Kikina.

The crew will live on board for six months to complete their mission of conducting approximately 250 scientific experiments in the space station that is "a floating laboratory," said Mann, a colonel in the U.S. Marine Corps.

Besides the other crew members, Mann will also be accompanied by personal items in her personal preference kit. The Dragon spacecraft allows 3.3 pounds for personal items.

"I have some special gifts for my family, which I can't say because they're a surprise. Definitely taking my wedding rings, and I have this dream catcher that my mother gave me when I was very young," she said. "It's kind of always stayed with me throughout my time."

This is the 45-year-old's first spaceflight and she looks forward to the science on board that will benefit the human race.

"One of the ones that I'm looking most forward to is called the biofabrication facility. And it is literally 3D printing human cells, which to me sounds so futuristic, right?" she said.

The force of gravity makes printing and growing cells on Earth difficult. That is a different story in space with "a much more intact structure of the cell," she said.

The end goal: printing human organs. "We're not there yet. However, we have successfully printed some heart cells, as well as part of the meniscus of a knee. And so this facility has flown, and then come and printed cells and then come back to Earth," she said. "They made changes, they learned it flew again, came back to Earth, they made changes, and they're about to fly it again. So that'll be our chance to participate."

Of course, she hopes to do a spacewalk or two since she trained a lot for that. That was probably the most challenging but enjoyable part of her astronaut training experience.

"So they put you in a spacesuit, just like you would be in space, and they blow up like a balloon," Mann said.

The pressure in the suit is filled to approximately 4.3 pounds per square inch, or psi. For comparison, the Earth's air pressure psi is at 14.7, according to NASA. The high pressure in the suits is needed to supply adequate oxygen and air pressure to let human bodies function properly.

"And that's what it's like when you go out the door in vacuum, then they put you in this huge pool to simulate microgravity, and use a team of divers and weights and foam," she said.

A mockup of the space station, or most components of it, lies inside this huge pool where the astronauts crawl around in "this kind of like scuba diving, kinda like a jungle gym" making modifications on the space station.

"But each time you move, you're working against the pressure of that suit, of that 4.3 psi. So it's like a marathon. The training run is six hours long, you're physically exhausted, you're mentally exhausted," Mann said. "You're done at the end of one of these runs, but everybody says it is the most realistic training for doing a spacewalk in space. And being under the water and climbing along the space station and doing these tasks. It is incredible. It is some of the coolest training I think that we do. And hopefully I'll have an opportunity to do that in space for real."

Astronaut dreams

Becoming an astronaut didn't occur to Mann as a kid. Years later, she says with a laugh, "Why would you not want to become an astronaut?"

"It was a little bit later on in life actually that I realized that being an astronaut was an opportunity and something that I could do," she said. "To be honest, I didn't understand when I was younger what astronauts actually did."

Mann graduated from Rancho Cotate High School in Rohnert Park, California, in 1995. She obtained a bachelor's of science degree in mechanical engineering in 1999 from the U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis, Maryland. In 1999, she was also commissioned as a second lieutenant in the U.S. Marine Corps.

She realized she could be a fighter pilot and a Marine simultaneously while riding in a F/A 18, a fighter and attack aircraft, in the summer before her senior year at the naval academy.

After earning a master's degree in mechanical engineering from Stanford University in 2001, she went to the U.S. Naval Test Pilot School. Mann has more than 2,500 hours in 25 different aircrafts, 200 carrier arrestments and 47 combat missions in Afghanistan and Iraq under her belt.

During test pilot school, she started looking at options for what to do next. Becoming an astronaut fell on the list.

She applied to the 21st astronaut class. Mann was selected with seven others in the 2013 cohort out of more than 6,100 applicants. At that time, it was the second largest number of applicants NASA had received. She was 35 and a major in the Marine Corps when selected.

To the moon and beyond

Little by little NASA is working its way to deep space exploration. The SpaceX Crew-5 mission is only the beginning for Mann.

"This is a huge part of our larger mission under Artemis to go to the moon and eventually to Mars," she said at an Aug. 4 NASA press conference. "So what we are going to do in low Earth orbit is a stepping stone to achieving those goals of exploration into deep space, the technology development, the research that will do some of the operations that will learn to develop and work with the ground, understanding how we're going to do that from a further distance where we don't have the accessibility of the ground so often."

In December of 2020, NASA announced Mann as part of the initial 18-member Artemis Team to return to the moon.

"There is so much exciting work ahead of us as we return to the moon, and it will take the entire astronaut corps to make that happen," said Chief Astronaut Pat Forrester in a 2020 press release. "Walking on the lunar surface would be a dream come true for any one of us, and any part we can play in making that happen is an honor. I am proud of this particular group of men and women and know that any of them would do an outstanding job representing NASA and the United States on a future Artemis mission."

Nicole Mann, of Wailaki descent, is poised to become the first Native woman in space when she launches to the International Space Station as a part of NASA's SpaceX Crew-5 mission next month. NASA

The Artemis mission plans to send two of the 18 astronauts to land on the lunar surface, the first woman and first person of color. If Mann is selected, she would be the first woman (and Native person) to step on the moon.

"It's just this really overwhelming sense of emotion in the best of ways that I can describe," she told Inverse, if she is the first woman. "Yes, you want to be the first person to walk on the moon, you want to fulfill that role, but really it's not about you. ... It's about the bigger mission, so you're just excited to support in whatever role you can."

The Artemis-III crewed mission hopes to land on the south pole of the moon's surface in 2025. A change from the original and unfeasible 2024 moon landing that was pushed by the Trump administration.

"Returning to the moon as quickly and safely as possible is an agency priority. However, with the recent lawsuit and other factors, the first human landing under Artemis is likely no earlier than 2025," said NASA Administrator Bill Nelson in 2021.

The Artemis-III will be the first crewed moon landing since Apollo 17 in 1972. Twelve astronauts have walked on the moon out of the 24 American astronauts who traveled to the moon between 1968 and 1972, according to NASA. The first moon landing was the Apollo 11 on July 20, 1969, by American astronauts Neil Armstrong and Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin, the first humans to walk on the moon.

Other Natives who have been to space or sent projects to the cosmos: John Herrington and Aaron Yazzie. Herrington, Chickasaw, was the first Native astronaut to travel into space. The Navy veteran spent 14 days on the space station. Yazzie is a Diné mechanical engineer at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in California. He has contributed to four Mars projects in his time with the agency.

While the history books write Mann's story, the Native astronaut will continue to train and prepare intensively for her mission in a couple of months.

"We're going to gain a ton of experience in flying low earth orbit, and any of us could be assigned to an Artemis mission in the future," she said. "And hopefully, we'll walk on the moon together one day."

Six Rivers Fires: Where to Get Help and How to Help the Helpers

In the face of tremendous need, with hundreds of residents displaced by a series of wild fires sparked by an Aug. 5 lightning storm around Willow Creek, Humboldt County nonprofits and residents have stepped up.

Donations — from donuts and dog food to livestock foster placements and meals — have come pouring into a variety of relief organizations and nonprofits that have stepped in as a part of a multi-layered disaster response.

"I really want to thank the community — the individuals, the businesses — everyone who has stepped up, just again and again," said Pay it Forward Humboldt Director Jessica Gregorio. "It's a year thing now. But this community is amazing. I love it."

With hundreds displaced — including dozens reportedly staying in an evacuation shelter set up by the American Red Cross — and the five fires collectively known as the Six Rivers Lightning Complex still largely uncontained and blanketing the area in smoke, more help will likely be needed in what Humboldt-Del Norte CalFire Chief Kurt McCray warned will be "a long battle." But so far, organizations have been up to the challenge.

Here's a quick look at resources available for those in need and those who want to help:

For Those Needing Assistance

Food for People, in partnership with Pay it Forward Humboldt and the Red Cross, held a free food distribution Aug. 12 at Dream Quest. Evacuees or others in need of food assistance can contact Food for People at (707) 633-8191 or emergency@foodforpeople.org.

Dream Quest Teen & Youth Center in Willow Creek (100 Country Club Drive, (530) 629-3564) is stocking essentials (masks, food boxes, blankets, hygiene products, etc.) and open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., Monday through Friday, until pop-up relief stations can be organized.

The Hoopla Rodeo Grounds (1767 Pine Creek Road, (707) 492-2851) has been turned into a large animal shelter, and has been helping to shelter smaller animals of those staying in the Red Cross evacuation center. The grounds cannot house goats, sheep, poultry or small animals, but "may be able to find temporary foster placements on a case-by-case basis," Allie Hostler, who is helping coordinate the effort, said the shelter has plenty of donated dog and cat food, and a list of people volunteering to foster, noting, "No large animals are without a safe and comfortable place to stay right now."

The U.S. Post Office in Willow Creek will be holding any UPS or FedEx delivery packages sent to residences in areas under evacuation order. They can be picked up during regular business hours — Monday through Friday, from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., or 9 to 11 a.m. on Saturday — and the post office can be reached at (530) 629-2185.

Pay it Forward Humboldt is also working to "serve as a liaison between the community that wants to help and the community that needs," Gregorio said. So if you're affected by the Six Rivers Lightning Complex Fire and need something, she encourages you to reach out. (707) 616-9191.

Ceallaigh Kelley visits with her cat Brownie at an evacuation center in Willow Creek after both were evacuated from their home Aug. 6. Allie Hostler

For Those Wanting to Help

Food for People, Humboldt County's food bank, distributes nearly 2 million pounds of food annually and is a vital part of local disaster response efforts. For information on how to make a tax-deductible donation directly to Food for People, or to look into making a food donation to the nonprofit, visit www.foodforpeople.org or call (707) 445-3166.

Pay it Forward Humboldt works to fill in the gaps between other disaster response agencies and those in need of assistance. For example, when Happy Donuts recently offered to donate hundreds of donuts to evacuees and firefighters but had no way to get them to Willow Creek from Eureka, Pay it Forward coordinated pick up and distribution. (Gregorio said the treats were especially well-received by grateful firefighters: "It was wonderful to see a big smile on their faces from something as simple as a donut.") Pay it Forward is a certified nonprofit and tax-deductible donations can be made by check (Pay it Forward Humboldt, 326 I St., Suite 102, Eureka, CA 95501), via Venmo (@ payit-forwardhumboldt), via PayPal (Payitforwardhumboldt@gmail.com, selecting the "Friends and Family" option to ensure the full donation is received) or through the Humboldt Area Foundation here.

"We're small," Gregorio said. "We don't pay anyone. Everything that comes in, goes out."

The nonprofit also maintains a list of current nonmonetary needs on its Facebook page. It currently includes box fans, basic pleated air filters (8 MERV rating), gift cards for fuel or essentials, water, snacks, men's socks, deodorant, paper towels, hair ties, gallon Ziploc bags, women's depends (size medium), sleeping mats and sleeping bags. If you have any of these items to donate — or have other nonmonetary donations you want to get to people in need — call or text the nonprofit at (707) 616-9191.

And Gregorio says, perhaps more than anything, the nonprofit needs volunteers.

"The money and the goods donations are huge, but getting people there to deal with it all is also huge," she said.

HAPI brings the first Japanese Obon festival to the county

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

People are still trickling into the lot in front of the Arcata Playhouse, thickening the crowd already encircling the low stage, where Marylyn Paik-Nicely, a “founding mother” of Humboldt Asians and Pacific Islanders in Solidarity (HAPI), stands in pink sneakers and a purple T-shirt commemorating this, the first Obon festival in Humboldt County, a cell phone in her back pocket. Some in the ring of attendees, both Japanese and non-Japanese, are wearing yukata (cotton summer kimono), festival hapi coats or kimono. Some of the kimono are perfectly arranged with artful contrasting bows, others are worn loosely over western clothes, some hang open like robes. But nobody seems to be fretting too much about it.

HAPI member Alex Ozaki-McNeill says the group wanted to encourage people to come out in whatever clothes spoke to their connection to Japanese culture. “Our general mindset is that we’re inviting people to share our culture,” she says, so they’re not worried about cultural appropriation. The event — a “Humboldt-style” Obon festival with drumming, dancing, food and children’s games — was planned as a chance for everyone to experience the annual tradition of connecting with one’s ancestors.

Ozaki-McNeill finds the simplest way to explain Obon, a Japanese Buddhist celebration going back more than 500 years, in California is to draw parallels to the Mexican Dia de los Muertos. Despite their very different origins, both involve remembrance, care and feeding of departed family and loved ones. During Obon, when the spirits of the dead return, the living visit and clean their ancestors’ graves and offer them food, placing photos, rice, fruit and favorite foods on a household altar alongside incense. Many Japanese add little wooden legs to a cucumber and an eggplant, symbolizing a fast horse to bring the spirits home and a slow cow for them to ride back to the afterworld. And out in town centers, there are festivals with bright paper lanterns and drum towers, atop which taiko drummers beat out a rhythm for circling dancers below.

Growing up in Humboldt County, where the Japanese American population is fairly small and dispersed, Ozaki-McNeill says her mother would take the family to the Bay Area to expose her and her brother to cultural events like Obon. “So this is really exciting to have something like this here.” Before her grandfather died a few years ago, Ozaki-McNeill went to Japan with him. Honoring his ancestors at his family temple and connecting with relatives was “on his bucket list,” she says. Now, with her own baby, she feels the importance of sharing the tradition with her daughter.

Back on stage, Gerald Sakamoto, head minister of the San Jose Buddhist Temple, tells a story from a sutra about a student who discovers his mother’s spirit is trapped in the Realm of Hungry Ghosts, where food turns to ash and flames. When he asks his teacher how to free her, the teacher says he must help his fellow monks and the people in his community. The 2,500-year-old story, he says, demonstrates how important it is “that we recognize that relationship to those around us, that we are not isolated. ... Today ... [during Obon] it’s not just Buddhists we should remember, or just our families, but all people in the world.” As he prepares to chant, he looks at his feet and shrugs. "I forgot my dress shoes," he says, drawing a laugh from the crowd.

He begins the chant and the attendees fall silent under the steady thrum of his voice as red and white paper lanterns bob on the lines above the lot. A trio of children with striped water-filled balloons on elastic strings bounce them lightly. A toddler in a yukata and Hello Kitty sneakers fidgets by the bike rack. On the other side of the circle, an older man in a pale cowboy hat hooks his thumbs in his belt and listens.

Sakamoto usually plays to a bigger crowd. The Obon festival in San Jose this year, the first since lockdown in 2020, drew some 900 dancers alone. But he says he's pleased to be a part of Humboldt's first Obon. "It's wonderful to see all this interest, seeing people be a part of the community," an aspect that can get a bit lost in outsized events. He says he prepared his talk with the varying backgrounds of Humboldt folks in mind, especially the Wiyot Tribe on whose land the festival would take place. "Rather than focus on a particular religion, [I focused] on a connection to people and to place."

When the Humboldt Taiko drummers start playing, it's chest pounding, thundering down into the pavement. Some spectators hold phones aloft to record the seven drummers arcing their sticks overhead, knocking at the wooden sides and skins of their drums in sync for rolling crescendos. Teacher Gary Ronne's solo numbers are even more physical as he leaps and dances barefoot around his drum, veering from impishness to high drama and back again.

It was at a ramen fundraiser for Taiko Swing Humboldt in 2019 that the idea for a Humboldt Obon festival first sparked. The Swingposium that the group put on in January of 2020 in partnership with San Jose Taiko was both a sober retelling of the mass imprisonment of Japanese Americans during World War II and a joyful mashup of taiko and big band music and dance. But the momentum it created was stalled by the pandemic.

But as events started to return, the HAPI group that grew out of Taiko Swing Humboldt saw an opportunity to hold an outdoor festival. "In traditional HAPI fashion, we put it together in a couple months," says Ozaki-McNeill with a chuckle. "HAPI is definitely a pan-Asian group — a lot of our coordinators identify as Japanese American but we want to incorporate more events in Humboldt that include other Asian and Pacific Islander cultures." There's significant overlap between the Obon organizers, the Swingposium group and the Eureka Chinatown Project, which recently worked to establish wayfinding signs for the city's historic Chinatown and rename one of its alleys Charlie Moon Way in honor of a man who resisted the 1885 Chinese Expulsion ("Heading for Charlie Moon Way," Nov. 7, 2021). Ozaki-McNeill notes that Paik-Nicely, a presence in all these projects, has been the driving force behind the high-speed effort for the Obon festival.

"So many people came together from

Attendees were encouraged to write messages to ancestors and attach them to the branches in a new local tradition.

so many different [API] backgrounds, not just Japanese, some hakujin,” Paik-Nicely says, using the typically neutral Japanese word for white people. She explains how Obon varies from Japan to America and between different regions and cities, so the group shared their favorite memories to figure out what elements to incorporate.

Paik-Nicely, who grew up Korean and third generation Okinawan in Japanese-influenced Hilo, Hawaii, recalls Obon as a season running from July into August. “Every Saturday there was a bon dance at a different [Buddhist] church,” as well as at Shinto shrines. “When I was younger, it was more like watching my aunties and learning the dances,” but in high school it became a social occasion. She has happy memories of driving her grandmother to the graveyard, where she’d walk from plot to plot, leaving gifts and telling stories about each friend and relative. “Each time, after, I just felt so good.”

Even far away in Humboldt, Paik-Nicely says, “I always know when it is Obon ... I always have an altar up anyway with pictures of my parents and grandparents just to feel in touch.” But without a Buddhist temple, sharing the season with others was difficult. Bringing Obon to Humboldt also connects to what she sees as a resurgence of Japanese American cultural practice. “After the internment and WWII ended, it was just so important for [second generation Japanese Americans] kids to be ‘American’ and assimilate,” she says, taking American names and speaking only

English, even if they attended Japanese language class. “The third generation is like, ‘Hey, we’re gonna reclaim our heritage.’”

HAPI is a Dreammaker Project of the Ink People, through which it establishes its nonprofit status and event insurance. Humboldt Area Foundation came through with a grant for event costs and HAPI got help with kitchen space at the Arcata Playhouse, tables, the stage and sound equipment through a city of Arcata event grant. The group set a budget of $8,000 on its crowdfunding page and was thrilled when a single donor put in about half that. The permit HAPI secured was for 400 people — a wild guess for the first-time event. Though there’s no formal headcount, attendance was in the hundreds.

When Paik-Nicely first contacted Craig Kurumada about heading up the bon dancing, he says he “was very dubious.”

“You know, I just thought, ‘OK, we don’t have a temple, or a priest and a really tiny Japanese community, but other than that,’” he trails off with a laugh. But he says HAPI had so much “energy and positive forward motion,” he got on board. Kurumada, a stalwart of the local folkdance community who specializes in Balkan dance, had taught bon dancing through the Osher Lifelong Learning Institute. He set an ambitious goal of eight dances for the Redwood Raks classes, all of which he learned as a kid in Salt Lake City. In the end, it yielded a core group of more than a dozen dancers who could lead others joining in at the festival. He also put tutorials online so people could practice at home.

Humboldt Taiko drummers give a thundering performance during the festival.

“There was a great deal of interest from non-Japanese,” and as he wondered why, Kurumada saw the irony. “Here I am as an Asian American and I’m always interested in all these other dances.” Often asked why he studies Balkan dance when he’s not Bulgarian, he replies he loves the music and the movement, and “it speaks to my heart.”

Kurumada’s own family, which is Japanese and Chinese, was never particularly into Obon. But that spoke to his heart, too — he was drawn to the gatherings and the dances as an elementary student and joined the practices months ahead of the festivals. “When I moved here, of course, there was no opportunity to do it.” For 30 years, he traveled to the Bay Area if he wanted to take part.

As much as he loves traditional dance,

Kurumada is not a hardcore purist, like some in the folkdance world who he says hope to “freeze things in time” instead of letting traditions evolve. “It’s a growing, organic tradition; it’s not just preservation. They’re making new dances all the time.”

Paik-Nicely echoes the sentiment, noting HAPI’s festival is “Obon Humboldt style. Many things won’t be like you’ll find in other places but we’re making it the way we want it to be.” In the spirit of community participation, Kelley Garrett found inspiration in the wooden ema plaques visitors hang at Shinto shrines and the strips of paper with wishes on them that adorn bamboo trees during Tanabata, also known as the Star Festival. Garrett brought her own young cherry tree with a few redwood branches at the base and set out paper for attendees to write messages for ancestors to hang in the branches.

After a Totoro mascot warms up the crowd, the bon dancing begins. Kurumada, fan in hand, and Ronne, drumming along to the piped in music, lean into their showmanship on stage, grinning and capering as two rings of dancers travel around them. Those who’d taken the class take the inside track, with newcomers following along, some laughing and stumbling, others mimicking with sober attention. When the music cuts out a moment, Ronne keeps the beat going a bit and the dancers continue their path to applause from the crowd.

Dressed in black and pink floral yukata, Leslie Sweeney-Fern watches with a friend. “I was late because I was trying to tie my obi right.” Her son had gone to Japan for a year of study abroad “and didn’t come home,” she says, smiling. While she’s visited Japan, it’s never been during Obon. “I think it’s fantastic ... it’s a real feel-good event.”

Yoshiko Skelton is surprised by the turnout, though she’s always found Humboldt welcoming. Originally from Kyoto, she moved to Humboldt in 1973 from Tokyo, where she worked. “Almost a native,” she says from the chair someone brought her earlier. In all those years, she’s never seen a festival like this. “This is very good ... a good atmosphere,” she says, eyes on the dancers, adding how much she enjoyed the taiko performance. She says she won’t dance because of a bad back but eventually she drifts into the outer circle.

When the music ends, Jim Hatchimonji straightens his fedora and regroups with his wife Rachel and daughter Emi, a straw fan tucked in his belt. “We’ve gone to Obon festivals in Hawaii and Gardena,” he says, though this is his daughter’s first time dancing.

Rachel Hatchimonji says the family has always had to travel if they wanted to attend something like this and she’s happy

Teacher Gary Ronne of Humboldt Taiko pounds out the beat on the largest drum.

“We didn’t know there would be such an outpouring of people,” says Kurumada, who took in the crowds with disbelief. In recent years, particularly over the course of the pandemic, anti-Asian rhetoric and violence have ramped up, adding to both the surprise and meaning of such a well-attended and diverse Obon gathering. “Of course, there was this whole period of ‘Asian-free’ Humboldt; I mean it’s pretty awful,” Kurumada says, referring to the Chinese Expulsion of 1885 and its aftermath. “I had no idea not only how many Japanese and Asian people are here but also Asian-connected people ... and families.” Add to that all those with no connection, who simply wanted to learn about Obon.

“I was overwhelmed,” says Paik-Nicely, who was moved by the attendance, as well as the number of people who came out in some form of Japanese dress. (The food vendors were overwhelmed, too, with the Obento stall, Jim Hito’s curry stand and the table selling omusubi with Spam or tofu between layers of rice running out entirely.)

“I think for us to have the Obon festival was a real celebration,” says Paik-Nicely, “the community coming together and honoring our ancestors and honoring tradition.” These were always the goals. But there are other joys from the day for her, like her grandson “asking all kinds of questions,” and joining the bon circle, enjoying the movement, dancing with his fan. ●

New Faces at Frankie's NY Bagels

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill
jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

On Sunday morning, Steve Band stood by the register at Frankie's NY Bagels, a crowd of paper bags marked with customers' names at his elbow. Beside him, Frankie Baker, owner and founder of the shop tucked in Redwood Acres, greeted a customer and introduced the new guy. Band and his wife, Rebecca, would be learning the ropes from Baker for a couple of weeks before taking over as the new owners selling the same bagels that have earned the shop a loyal following.

In October of 2020, after running Frankie's NY Bagels as a one-man shop for six months, owner Frankie Baker told the Journal he was ready to sell. But a year and a half later, he was still rising before dawn to shape, boil and bake the bagels his stalwart customer base was ordering online along with doughnuts and other sweets he'd added to the menu. The shoulder problems that made the work difficult hadn't gotten better without the surgery he'd put off but he still hadn't found a buyer. He'd had a few nibbles and gotten close but after having plans fall through, he says he was "not burned," but possibly a little toasted.

A couple weeks ago, after landing a job as a youth prevention specialist with the nonprofit Humboldt Independent Practice Association, Baker announced he was throwing in the oven mitt and shutting down. Like many regular patrons, Steve and Rebecca Band were disappointed.

"He said, 'This is your last bagel,' and I said, 'No, it's not!'" says Steve Band with a wide smile. Band, who hails from Albany, California, says he'd been looking for a career change after years as a political campaign consultant who'd done a lot of work with unions before coming to Humboldt two years ago. "It felt like the universe was speaking to me."

The Bands are both Jewish but Steve says visiting his wife's hometown of Stamford, Connecticut, was his first taste of traditional bagels. "We grew up thinking Noah's Bagels were bagels," he says, falling into a brief silence.

When they moved to Humboldt, they, like many East Coast transplants, became steady customers at Frankie's (everything bagel with pickle cream cheese for him, sesame with vegan cream cheese for her). The shop's vegan following pointed them to Redwood Acres, as the bagels, made without egg wash, are vegan friendly. And, as Steve Band says, "Frankie makes the greatest vegan doughnuts of all time."

Learning to make those bagels, doughnuts and other treats from Baker, who starts work before 4 a.m., means a shift in one's circadian rhythms, but Band says he's adjusting. "I feel like, at that point, it's so early it's like being a night person," he says. An avid home baker, he'll be doing the bulk of the production, with Rebecca working the front and their 7-year-old daughter in tow. Band says he's not looking to change any of Frankie's staples, vegan or otherwise, and is determined to keep turning out bagels with the pebbly surface, chewiness and soft interior of Baker's recipe. The limited hours and online orders will stay in place, too, for a while.

"Once I can slot in and do what Frankie does, then we can look at expanding," says Band. He and Rebecca are looking forward to adding flaky rugelach for Hannukah and jammy hamantaschen pastries for Purim, "family recipes the Jewish community hasn't had in Humboldt." Also, he says, "Frankie is gonna stay on as a consultant, so if he has a midnight bagel idea, he can send it over."

Baker, who's been volunteering to work with middle school kids, says he's ready to get started in a new direction. He's ready to finally get his shoulder surgery and lay off the physical labor, too. Asked if he'll start baking bagels at home as he did before opening Frankie's, he gave an emphatic no. "I'm going to go see Steve," he says. "I'm going to be waiting in line with everybody else." Previously, he'd said the business would be a good one for a couple to run. "Now getting to know [the Bands], they're like the perfect people to take over."

Fall-Run Salmon Quotas Underway on the Klamath

By Kenny Priest

fishing@northcoastjournal.com

Fall regulations began Aug. 15 on the Klamath River, triggering the start of the fall salmon quota. The California Fish and Game Commission adopted bag and possession limits for the Klamath Basin based on a quota of 2,119 fall-run adult kings. On the Klamath, the fall season closes Dec. 31. The fall season on the Trinity begins Sept. 1 and closes Dec. 31.

On the Lower Klamath, from the State Route 96 bridge at Weitchpec to the mouth, 1,060 adults will be allowed for sport harvest. The section above the bridge at Weitchpec to 3,500 feet downstream of the Iron Gate Dam will get 360 adults.

The Spit Area (within 100 yards of the channel through the sand spit formed at the Klamath River mouth) will close when 15 percent of the total Klamath River Basin quota is taken downstream of the U.S. Highway 101 bridge. In 2022, 318 adults can be harvested below the U.S. Highway 101 bridge before the closure at the mouth is implemented. The rest of the area below U.S. Highway 101 (the estuary) will remain open to recreational fishing. Important reminder: All legally caught Chinook salmon must be retained while fishing the spit. Once the adult component of the total daily bag limit has been retained, anglers must cease fishing in the spit area.

On the Trinity side, the quota is set at 699 adults. The quota will be split almost evenly: 350 adults for the main stem Trinity downstream of the Old Lewiston Bridge to the State Route 299 West bridge at Cedar Flat, and 349 adults for the main stem Trinity downstream of the Denny Road bridge at Hawkins Bar to the confluence with the Klamath.

The daily bag limit will be two Chinook salmon, no more than one of which may be greater than 23 inches, and a possession limit of six, of which only three may exceed 23 inches. Once these quotas have been met, no Chinook salmon greater than 23 inches in length may be retained (anglers may still retain a limit of Chinook salmon less than 23 inches in length).

Visit www.nrm.dfg.ca.gov/FileHandler.ashx?DocumentID=202686&inline for a complete list of regulations. Anglers may monitor the quota status of open and closed sections of the Klamath and Trinity rivers by calling the Klamath information hotline at 800-564-6479. All anglers on the Trinity and Klamath rivers must have salmon harvest cards in their possession when fishing for salmon.

The Oceans:

Eureka

According to Tim Klassen of Reel Steel Sport Fishing, the tuna bite turned on pretty well last Friday off of Eureka. "Boats didn't need to go much farther than 20 miles," said Klassen. "The tuna were in that general area for a while but they were spread out. Friday, for whatever reason, they decided to come up and the boats did well. With all the warm water, the salmon fishing hasn't been great. Top scores have been a couple per boat. The fish being caught are on the bottom. Hopefully the wind we're seeing this week will cool the water."

Trinidad

The rockfish bite out of Trinidad remains excellent according to Curt Wilson of Wind Rose Charters. He said, "They come a little slower when we have minus tides, but overall, the bite is still good. Some days we're getting a nice variety and others, it's nothing but black rockfish. The lingcod bite is still going strong too. Fish are being caught from Flat Iron all the way to Sue-Meg (formerly Patrick's Point). There are some salmon being caught, mostly out in deeper water and the fish are right on the bottom."

Lower Klamath

The water color is finally starting to improve after last Monday's blowout. It's not quite green, but it's improving slightly each day. There's plenty of steelhead to be had from the Glen up and some fall kings are making their way into the lower river. Fishing should really improve over the next couple weeks. Fall regulations went into effect Monday, Aug. 15. The daily bag limit will be two Chinook, no more than one adult (longer than 23 inches) and the possession limit is six, no more than three adults.

"LARGEST BRAND SELECTION IN THE COUNTY"

Claiming Races and Maidens

Demystifying horse-racing before the Humboldt County Fair kicks off

By Linda Stansberry

linda@northcoastjournal.com

Cindy Olsen-Bugenig doesn't count on how many horses are coming to the races at the Humboldt County Fair until she "can see the whites of their eyes crossing Fernbridge." Olsen-Bugenig, herself a racing horse owner and breeder since 1979, is the vice-president of the Humboldt County Fair Association and chair of its Racing Committee. The total number of racehorses in the state of California has dropped precipitously since the 2008 financial crisis. To attract more owners, trainers and horses to Ferndale's half-mile racecourse, the HCFA and the California Association of Racing Fairs is relying on a number of new strategies.

"We're here for the little guy," says Olsen-Bugenig. "The horses that we get here are the ones that run the lower-end races at the big tracks. They might not be able to win at those tracks because the quality of horses is probably better than what they are, so they come here and sometimes they can run twice, because we have two weekends of racing so they can make their money here at this meet and survive to live another year."

The track in Ferndale runs "claiming races" with a claim of $2,500. What that means, in essence, is that anyone with a racing license can claim a horse prior to a race if they put up that sum and claim ownership after the race. (Multiple claims are settled with the roll of a die.) The conceit of a claiming race is that it equalizes the value of the horses; the owner of a horse worth $13,000 wouldn't risk losing it at a claiming race of $2,500.

"You can't get emotionally attached, well, that's easy to say. I cried when I lost my first one for weeks," says Olsen-Bugenig.

Spectators can place bets on their favorites at the booths in the middle of the grandstands, beginning as low as $1. The odds for each horse to win are featured on a sign on the track, and they'll fluctuate according to how much is being bet. Olsen-Bugenig recommends watching the post parade, in which the horses walk the track for display prior to the race, to get a good idea of which horse might be a comer.

"You can watch their movements, if they're on their toes, or if they're just nodding off while they're walking," she says. "I like the ones that have the energy."

Gamblers can also read a racing form with stats about the horses' past performances prior to the race or "just rely on pure, blind luck." If you wait for the post parade, however, you'll have about eight minutes afterward in which to place your bets. The average race, measured in furlongs, lasts mere seconds, with horses covering the 4-furlong (half mile) length of the fairgrounds racetrack at an average rate of about 12 seconds per furlong. The unusually short length of the Humboldt County racetrack has been a disincentive for some jockeys, says Olsen-Bugenig, given that it means a sharp turn not far out of the gate. About six years ago, the fair association "banked" two of the turns, smoothing them out and making them safer. The track is also soil rather than a grass "turf course," which puts off some owners worried about impact to their horses' bodies.

But the biggest issue at play, Olsen-Bugenig says, is money. Gas prices have risen, as has the price of feed. California has an increasing number of regulations for the testing and safety of horses. For these reasons, many folks in the business choose to go out of state.

"It's expensive," says Larry Swartzlander, executive director of CARF. "It's just an expensive sport. California doesn't have the luxury of slot machines or a lottery to supplement purses."

Many other states allow "racinos," casinos where a percentage money generated from slot machines pays into the purse horses can win at the track. In California, where slot gambling is restricted to Indian casinos on sovereign land, this is not an option.

Swartzlander sees two new sports betting initiatives that will be on the ballot this fall as potential boons to the industry, a way to add money that might not only incentivize people to keep racing in the state but get into the business in the first place.

"Purses need to be raised, they need to be incentivized to buy that racehorse," he says. "Here, a $5,000 claimer runs for [a] $15,000 [purse]. In New York, he runs for $44,000."

Swartzlander adds that the total impact of the initiatives is not clear, but says his group is trying to find ways to make inroads with a new generation that is increasingly online rather than on the track, including adding fantasy league betting to horseracing.

CARF has estimated about 220 horses will enter the races in Ferndale this month, which will average out to about six horses per race. This is less than some previous years, which saw eight horses per race, but it's enough to draw a crowd.

"I'm a guy who thinks the glass is half full," says Swartzlander. "We're working on incentives."

Along with adding money to the purse, which CARF did this year, the HCFA has worked to create extra incentives for horse owners and trainers to make the trip, including giving them gas cards to compensate for increased fuel costs.

The big event for the Humboldt County Fair is the Marathon, a full mile and five-eighths, a length Olsen-Bugenig says is "almost unheard of." The purse for the marathon is $20,000.

"Everyone wants to have a marathon horse," she says. "That's why they come up here."

In previous years, Olsen-Bugenig recalls, the jockeys would keep dried peas in their pockets and throw them out when they made a turn to remember how many laps they had left for the Marathon.

Olsen-Bugenig and her cohort also see an opening for more entries into Maiden Races, which are reserved for horses that have never had a win, also referred to as "maidens." In the horseracing community, Ferndale has become known as a "Maiden Breaker," a decidedly outdated term used to refer to racetracks where horses can prove themselves before moving up the ranks.

"So, I'm thinking if we add more money to those maidens, maybe we can get some more from Golden Gate," she says, referring to Golden Gate Fields. Jim Morgan, special counsel to the HCFA, recently attended a California Horse Racing Board meeting to request that board renew its policy of not allowing Golden Gate Fields to offer claiming races of $5,000 or below during the Humboldt County Fair. In 2014, CHRB threatened Golden Gate Fields with sanctions after it scheduled under $5,000 claiming races for the second week of the fair, effectively diverting horses away from Ferndale.

Olsen-Bugenig says one of the biggest draws for out-of-area racers is the atmosphere and small-town feel of Ferndale. The annual event is a great social occasion for those in the industry, she says, "kind of like a one-year reunion."

"We're smallest racing fair in the state — what you would call the way racing used to be," she says. "We have the crowds. We have the enthusiasm. We have the community support. It's hard for us to attract horses based on our location because people have to drive a long way. It costs a lot of money to come up here to the racetrack. So, we're kind of up against it on that. But we just have a wonderful community here that loves us." ●

Ingrid Nickelsen's Legacy at Morris Graves

The late artist's work and juried all-women show

By Tamar Burris
artbeat@northcoastjournal.com

Ingrid Nickelsen was not originally from Humboldt County but her legacy here is strong in her landscape paintings capturing the raw beauty of rivers, creeks and wilderness areas both familiar and remote. It is also alive in the estate Nickelsen bequeathed to help nurture local women artists after her death in 2005. Since 2007, the Ingrid Nickelsen Trust has gifted more than $300,000 to women artists in the Humboldt area via annual grants.

To honor the 15th year of the organization this year, the group of women involved with the trust (informally known as "Liz's Painters," thanks to comradery built during wilderness painting retreats held by Liz Harwood Pierson and Terry Oats in 2004 and 2005) sought to do something larger for the community. Teaming up with the Morris Graves Museum of Art, they laid the groundwork for a month-long celebration of women artists and Nickelsen herself. The result is a pair of exhibitions, Ingrid Nickelsen Trust Juried Exhibition: Celebrating 15 Years of Ingrid Nickelsen's Legacy and its companion show Use This Map to Help You Explore: The Landscapes of Ingrid Nickelsen. They are an ode to both a remarkable woman no longer with us and remarkable women artists working in Humboldt today.

The exhibit also marks the first time Nickelsen's work has been on public display since 2006. Originally from the Boston area, the artist was a hiker and backpacking enthusiast who made her home in Eureka in the 1960s. Primarily a ceramicist, she took up landscape painting two decades later and used her treks into the wilderness to capture scenery in an extraordinarily unique fashion. She sometimes observed her chosen sites for several days at a stretch, painting the different conditions she saw with vivid hues and in translucent layers that made both water and earth seem to jump to life. A 2005 trek into the Siskiyou Wilderness proved her last when she injured herself in a fall. But even until her final moments, Nickelsen was dedicated to the local art community, writing a will on the back of her trail map in which she detailed the use of her estate to fund women artists. (The catalog for the show includes an essay by Journal contributor Gabrielle Gopinath that will also be available at www.humboldtarts.org with more on the artist's life and work.)

Since its beginnings, the trust has been giving discretionary grants without solicitations for things like class fees, travel budgets, medical expenses, art supplies and the like. However, this is the first time the trust has organized a juried exhibition for money. "Each woman we have granted money to has a different need or reason for validation and financial recognition," said trust spokesperson Carrie Grant. However, she said, "We have lost a few art galleries in the past several years and women have fewer places to show. We thought that an exhibit was a great way to allow all women artists in Humboldt County an opportunity to show their work."

The juried show is also the first all-women art show at the museum. There was no entry fee for artwork and organizers were shocked to receive 234 entries — more than double their expectation and the largest return on a call for entries Humboldt Arts Council Executive Director-Curator Jemima Harr has seen in her 18 years with the museum. "To me, this is really uniting women artists in this community and that's what it's all about." She added working with the trust on the exhibit has been an honor. "And to finally get artists and visitors coming in again the way we did before the pandemic is fabulous," said Harr.

The exhibit's call-for-entries drew works of art from all genres: paintings, textiles, ceramics, sculptures and more. The job of narrowing the field fell to judge and Humboldt-based abstract painter Joan Gold, herself a past grant recipient. "Joan is kind of the matriarch of women artists in Humboldt County," said Grant, noting the museum staff and others working on the show are all women.

Gold walked slowly among the entries, considering and categorizing each piece with a sticky note. She knew what she was looking for but wanted to give each piece the study it was due. Color and use of paint and textures were priorities, and Gold was clear the winning pieces had to have intention and vision; they could not be "accidental." Additionally, they had to represent Nickelsen's legacy in a way that felt fitting.

In the end, Gold selected 11 winners whose awards were presented during an Aug. 6 reception at the museum. The 10 Ingrid Nickelsen Trust $500 award winners are: Trixie Galletti, Lori Goodman, Sherry Hazelton, Cheryl Peterson Rau, Laura Corsiglia, Anna Oneglia, Christy Tjaden, Shoshana McAvoy, Naomi Ruth Olsen and Carol Anderson. The winning pieces are all unique and represent different mediums — including Goodman's hanging sculpture "knots, sticks, and stories" and Tjaden's more abstract painting "Nostalgia as Landscape: Wandering in a Long Forgotten Love Song, She Found Two Snakes Where Once She Believed There Was a Road" — but each exudes a richness of color and attention to detail reminiscent of Nickelsen.

The Juror's Choice Award for $1,000 went to ceramicist Annakatrinn Burnham for her 2022 sculpture "Generations." A complex cubic ceramic sculpture that hints of a crab pot in shape and nature, it is sublimely crafted with layers of texture and color that connect well to Nickelsen's work. In expressing her gratitude, Burnham said the show "is a testament to our thriving community of women artists ... I am both humbled and inspired even just sharing this vibrant space with so many of Humboldt's talented women artists."

The Morris Graves Museum of Art hosts Ingrid Nickelsen Trust Juried Exhibition: Celebrating 15 Years of Ingrid Nickelsen's Legacy and Use This Map to Help You Explore: The Landscapes of Ingrid Nickelsen through Sept. 16. ●

EXIT Theatre's Indie Development

A San Francisco satellite space settles into Arcata

By Wendy Butler

frontrow@northcoastjournal.com

When you approach the building on the Arcata Plaza in which EXIT Theatre is located, the first thing you'll notice is first-floor occupant Moore's Sleep World ("Sale, Sale, Sale" "Welcome back Students ..."). And then to the right side on the front part of the building there's an "Aikido" sign promoting the Northcoast Aikido studio. Above these signs is the EXIT Theatre banner.

How can there possibly be a performance space in there? But there is, at the top of the stairs.

EXIT bills itself as "indie," focused on independence, authenticity, courage and often the willingness to commit to projects that won't make much money. The non-profit has been operating in San Francisco for nearly 40 years, providing low-cost space and multi-layered production support for artists to re-imagine classics and create new work. EXIT produces festivals, too, including the annual San Francisco Fringe Festival, which this year runs Sept. 8 through 17. In San Francisco, EXIT has four small venues at 156 Eddy St., and a fifth space housing resident company Cutting Ball Theater nearby on Taylor Street.

"I think art, in general, especially live performance, is really key to humanity," said Christina Augello, EXIT Theatre founder and artistic director. But in March of 2020, live performances stopped — along with virtually all "normal" life — due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

Yet, in late 2020, in the midst of its attempting to continue theatrical productions via streaming services, Augello and EXIT's Managing Director Richard Livingston decided, with their board's approval, to lease the former Community Yoga Center on the second floor of 890 G St. in Arcata. After re-purposing the space for a year, EXIT Theatre began presenting a variety of live, in-person work this spring.

The Arcata EXIT is a 35-seat venue. The seats and tables are on the same level as the stage, with the lighting bar hanging behind them. It's an intimate space that's all about performer-audience engagement.

One reason for locating the satellite theater here is Social Security, Augello said. She recently retired after 37 years from her "day job" as a bartender at The Saloon in North Beach, San Francisco. She added living in San Francisco on Social Security checks isn't practical. Currently Augello spends half her time in San Francisco and half in Arcata.

But it's not just about what things cost, Augello said. She recalled visiting Arcata about 35 years ago, sitting in a restaurant and looking out at the plaza and thinking, "What a cool place."

Augello said when she considered where she wanted to relocate, she thought about Arcata and her "three Cs:" cost, culture and climate. She's added "community" now, as well.

"Arcata kind of feels like a neighborhood I've moved into," Augello said. "I lived in San Francisco for 50 years, I'm a city girl. ... In the past two years of being here ... I'm getting Arcata-fied."

The theater is not just about plays, Augello said. She acknowledged that our area offers a variety of local theaters for that purpose, though Arcata Playhouse, North Coast Repertory Theatre and Redwood Curtain Theatre also present music, dance and other performances. What she wants to grow here is comparable to how she feels EXIT has served the San Francisco arts community for several decades. She said EXIT is a "performing arts studio" rather than being specific to theater.

"It is focused on individual artists," she said. "We don't limit ourselves just to theater and we don't push a particular type of art."

For example, Augello said, EXIT participates monthly in Arts! Arcata and presents DIVA Burlesque Arcata, featuring local dancers who have performed with many of the local burlesque groups and Jaiden Clark, who works with a variety of local theater companies designing lights. She sees EXIT fitting in the local "cultural ecosystem" by offering workspace, too. TK Film Studios approached Augello with an interest in using the EXIT for rehearsals and filming, and Lara Henderson is presenting Improv Taster monthly workshops there. Deadline Junkies, a collective of screenwriters led by Rale Sidebottom, has offered workshops at the theater, too.

And there are plays, too. Upcoming theatrical productions at the Arcata EXIT include Beckett's Krapp's Last Tape, a one-person, one-act play with Arnold Waddell and directed by John Heckel that runs Aug. 26 through 28. In October, Augello will perform in a new work titled Waking Sam Beckett, written by Arcata/Chico resident Marc Gabriel, who will perform alongside Augello in this production.

Augello grew up in Buffalo, New York, where she said her home life was "dysfunctional," and "theater really was a refuge, you know." The name "EXIT" reflects her love of existentialism and absurdist theater (the theater is legally incorporated as EXITheatre, which is a play on the word "existential") for which she thanks Joe Krysiak, who ran a Buffalo storefront performance space called Green Sleeves and introduced her to the works of Samuel Beckett and Eugène Ionesco, among others.

Even though the county offers a variety of arts incubators and theaters, Augello asks, why not more opportunities? This goes back to her time developing EXIT Theatre in the storefront of the Cadillac Hotel in the Tenderloin 40 years ago, focusing on collaboration, audience engagement, whatever art form you choose and a place to make that happen.

"Creativity and imagination are powerful tools," Augello said. "I mean, we have to have it. ... I don't know, maybe it'll soften the world, maybe it'll help the world, maybe it'll do nothing, but that's what I've been doing, and it really goes deep."

There's room for more at the EXIT and Augello said she wants the Arcata space used. (Information is available at www.theexit.org.) "EXIT Theatre in San Francisco is built on a village," she says, a local community of visual, performing and literary artists. "That's how it works. So, I need to build that village here, so this will work."

Augello said she believes "art can change the world. ... And as my late and good friend Diane di Prima said, 'The only war that matters is the war against the imagination.'"

Two Kinds of Tunes

By Collin Yeo

music@northcoastjournal.com

It has stuck with me over the years is how haunted some artists are (or were). I'm talking about folks like John Fahey, Townes Van Zandt, early-career-pre-coming-out Janis Ian (her record Between the Lines remains one of my misery favorites) and the late Jason Molina of Songs: Ohia and Magnolia Electric Co., who unceremoniously drank himself to death during the span of his 30s. Due to some weird, likely misguided summer activities during the recent full moon cycle, I was listening to a lot of his tunes, even going so far as learning and arranging one for myself, which is rare because I generally hate playing music these days. But the guy had talent, and there is a shard of broken-hearted genius cutting through his sparse and plaintive songs like a lethal burr. One thing that has always drawn me to music like that is the central function it provides, the lineage of which stretches back to the Delta blues and beyond: It's a sin-eater for your pain. The singer hurts and his songs are sad, and in that sadness comes validation of your own misery, sometimes even relief. Taking these sonic inoculations of vaccine-strength hardship is one way to beat the blues and likely why I didn't drink myself to death during my 30s. Borrowing from Pope's famous quote, to err is human and to write a good song about fucking up is pretty close to divine. Forgiveness, fear, death, sex and failure all float through these songs like spectral jellyfish, leaving tendril marks behind your eyes long after the notes have died. Van Zandt once said something like, "There are two kinds of music in this world, the Blues and 'Zippity Doo-Dah.'" If you prefer the latter then you can disregard this intro. If we're friends and I really like you, maybe I'll play you my version of Molina's "Farewell Transmission" on bass sometime, Big Muff drone, lighter slide melody and all.

Have a good week.

Thursday

Few bands really got the formula as right as ZZ Top, the Texas power trio whose ripping licks and hot grooves entertained the world for five decades. The group's third album Tres Hombres is a standby in my personal rotation, particularly in the truck. And while you can no longer enjoy the trio's live antics since the unfortunate death of bassist Rusty Hill last July, there is a hot local cover band called Beer Drinkers and Hell Raisers who are carrying on the tradition. Check 'em out today at 6 p.m. at a free one on Madaket Plaza.

Friday

Widely regarded as one of the greatest reggae artists of all time and certainly one of the greatest living female artists, Sister Carol's hypnotic, "toasting" style of vocal delivery runs roughshod over the expectations of what feminine vocals are "supposed" to present themselves as in the boy's club world of reggae music. A lacework of contradictions, her vocal delivery is monotone, melodious, hard, gentle, powerful and yielding, depending upon the song. That there is so much nuance in her delivery in a style that originated in the harsh and loud world of Jamaican dancehalls is a testament to her creative genius. Come see for yourself tonight at Humbrews at 9:30 p.m. ($25, $20 advance).

Saturday

Clementine Was Right is the musical vehicle of writer Mike Young, whose poetry and prose has sprouted up in many major just-off-mainstream media outlets over the past decade. The songs have thus been inflected with the cadence of stories, as the New Mexico-based group unfurls a sound that is at once dusty and sparkled, like the faded rhinestones on your mom's favorite Saturday night jacket from yesteryear. The California Poppies are a wise local opener for this one, with that shiny pop sound evoking a time when Technicolor gave way to Kodachrome in the sunny realm of "California Dreaming." The Miniplex is the place, the hour is 8 p.m. and the price is 10 bucks. Not a bad delivery charge for anything coming from the Land of Enchantment.

Sunday

The 2010s were known for quite a few trends, many ranging from odious to world-destroying. One trend that didn't suck, however, was the soul revival that has graduated from clubs to festivals, theaters and arenas. One of the better examples from this new pack of R&B upstarts is Durand Jones & the Indications, whose spare sound is evocative of all the things that keep people spinning Motown and Stax Records vinyl delights at home and in the club. Plus I'm a sucker for a drummer who sings, which is a duty that drummer Aaron Frazer shares with frontman Jones. This Center Arts show will inhabit the remodeled Van Duzer Theatre tonight at 8 p.m., with special guest keysman Kiefer in tow ($40, $90 VIP).

Monday

It's the back end of my column, which means it's the front end of the new week in the post-dog days of summer, which means not too much is happening regarding live bands. However, I like to juice some of the other stuff going on regularly, and who doesn't love a little karaoke? If your answer was, "I love a little karaoke," come over to the Jam at 9 p.m.

Tuesday

Speaking of regular local gigs, check out the Clam Beach Tavern if you're in the mood for Hip Hop Night with DJM. That might sound vague and enigmatic but I'm reporting the basics because what more information do you need, anyway? Oh yeah, the time: 10 p.m.

Wednesday

Movie night. Tonight's showing at the Arcata Theatre Lounge is an utter classic from the world of animated tech-noir futuresongs from Japan. I'm talking about Ghost in the Shell, the cel and CGI-created 1995 masterpiece set in the distant world of seven years from now. Whether we will indeed have human-cyborg hybrids in 2029 remains to be seen. But beyond being an action-packed visual bombardment, it's most interesting in its examination of classic existential concerns, such as being, authenticity and free will. And the soundtrack is killer. Pre-show raffle at 6 p.m., movie at 7:40 p.m., $5 or $9 if you want a poster.

Collin Yeo (he/him) is still working on his ideal summer bod, which includes growing a carapace, claws and many scuttlin' legs. He lives in Arcata.

Oh yes, it's back! From outer space. The universe-renowned BridgeFest and Flying Saucer Contest returns this Saturday, Aug. 20 from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. for a day of fun in the hot August sun (free). Where else can humans compete against aliens in a flying saucer throwing contest all in the name of outrageous fun? The contest is in a slightly different spot this year and we are told the landing coordinates are the school yard at Bridgeville School on Kneeland Road (just past the old bridge). Plus, all the usual, out-of-this-world festivities you know and love: live music, tasty food and drink, an alien parade, raffle, Wild Kidz zone, contests and a craft fair.

Trinidad Artisans Market. Submitted

Sunday markets all over the county are in full bloom in this mid-to-end of August. Starting up this weekend is the new Blue Lake Sunday Market, which is on Sunday, Aug. 21 (and every Sunday through Sept. 25) from 1 to 5 p.m. and features a farmers market, live music, vendors and a bar. The Old Town Vintage Market in Eureka happens this Sunday, Aug. 21 (and every third Sunday of the month through October) from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. at Redwood Retro. There, you'll find a summer block party with vintage, second hand and artisan vendors. Up north, the Trinidad Artisans Market happens Sundays from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. at Saunders Plaza with plenty of local art and crafts, live music and barbecue until mid September.

Heads up, Humboldt: While the county's masking mandate has been lifted, Public Health is still strongly recommending masking indoors in public, social distancing and "avoiding crowds and poorly ventilated spaces." COVID-19 is still with us, so be sure to check the protocols at event venues.

The Bear Roars

By Grant Scott-Goforth

screens@northcoastjournal.com

I've never been a particularly dedicated consumer of food shows, despite my infatuation with eating. Killing a couple of minutes before bed with whichever PBS cooking show might be on is always a simple delight (unless you are hungry). All the better if the host is traveling.

Polished food documentaries like Jiro Dreams of Sushi (2011) have left me cold with unrelatable philosophies of eating and feeding people. Cooking competitions fall prey to unwatchable reality show tropes (the exception being the Great British Bake Off, which despite my never having made baked goods, is a delight). Rescue-style shows, which most often seem to exist to allow someone to brow-beat and chastise some poor schmuck, are a huge turnoff.

The Bear, then, comes as a wondrous surprise, instantly becoming one of my all-time favorite pieces of filmmaking as I breezed through its eight episodes last week.

The Bear traces Carmen "Carry" Berzatto's (Jeremy Allen White) return to his family's greasy spoon restaurant, a neighborhood fixture that cranks out family-style comfort food in his hometown Chicago neighborhood for its rough and tumble habitués. Carry had recently ascended to the pinnacle of fine dining fame and success, working, as we learn in flashbacks, in sterility and abuse under an unnamed Michelin-starred chef.

Carry's brother Michael, who was widely beloved by his extended family of siblings, cousins, coworkers and customers, has died. The circumstances aren't initially clear, nor are the details of the arrangement regarding Original Beef of Chicagoland. Michael left Carry half his restaurant even though he forbade him from entering it before he died.

And so Carry, fresh from French Laundry, book publishing and celebrity kitchens around the world, must ingratiate himself to the long-toiling staff of the Original Beef and bring his elevated standards to his family restaurant.

Carry's sister Natalie (Abby Elliott) owns the other half and it's clear she's bending over backward — taxing her own career and family commitments — to keep the place afloat, dodging tax concerns, overdue bills and more.

With the restaurant comes "Cousin"

Richie (Ebon Moss-Bachrach), a brash loud-mouth who's managed and run the front of the restaurant for years. Richie doesn't take well to change or to taking orders from Carry, whose cooking background couldn't be more dissimilar. Nor does the rest of the staff, a tight-knit back-of-the-house consisting of fewer than a dozen staff members. Neighborhood toughs, health inspectors, mounting debt and other outside forces push Carry and the Original Beef staff to their emotional limits.

The Bear plays out more like a movie than a TV series. Refreshingly free of exposition or overt explanation, viewers are left to construct the family's and restaurant's backgrounds from the ongoing relationships.

Details emerge slowly, carefully. Glimpses of the clientele indicate how important it is to the community and, in turn, how meaningful it is to the staff, the family that makes up the core of the show.

Sydney Adamu (a delightful Ayo Edebiri) a classically trained chef and Carry fangirl joins the crew, further adding tension to the gumbo of ambitions, expectations and emotions in the kitchen.

The Bear is a story of pain, grief and trauma. It confronts the wounded masculinity of Carry and Richie, painting a portrait of despair masked by bravado and endless workdays. Its kitchen is kinetic and claustrophobia and anxiety inducing. The cast shouts dialogue over each other as deadlines and pressures mount, wills are tested and tempers flare.

But the Bear has more heart and more to examine about kitchens where celebrity, abuse and unwavering exactitude are all but celebrated in food media. It accomplishes this while celebrating the devotion that cooking can induce in people and with loving attention to the details of a kitchen and the preparation of food.

Carry has exacting expectations but his method is to coax the best out of his staff, to encourage their best selves, to give them the power to expect more from themselves and each other. Still, Carry is a flawed man, a survivor of kitchen trauma, and with mounting stresses, he finds it harder to keep it together.

White, as Carmen, is remarkable in a role that seems tailored for him. He brings charisma and vulnerability to a deeply nuanced character. His talent is matched by the rest of the cast, whose backgrounds largely stem from comedy. It shows — The Bear is at times uproarious, with perfect comic timing.

Me procrastinating by working on literally anything but writing. The Bear

The Bear is lovingly crafted, and even its most minor characters — an-always hungry hanger-on fix-it guy, the quiet dish-washing staff — are affectingly full of life. The camaraderie of a kitchen environment is real and, if people can temper their expectations and find something to reach for, it can be more family than family. There is stress, there is trauma in food. But perhaps, there can be healing in food. TVMA. HULU. ●

No Crabs Allowed

By Mike Kelly
washedup@northcoastjournal.com

The large sign over the archway said: "Welcome to Pillowburg Resort and Spa!" The small sign next to it said: "No Crabs Allowed." The guard, a flabby sea slug, noticed me and said, "Oi! We don't allow your kind. Beat it."

I was like, "Why? What did I do?" The guard said, "You are a granular claw crab (Oedignathus inermis). You are hard and bumpy. You are the opposite of a pillow. The family name of your kind of crab is Lithodidae, which literally means 'resembling a rock.' Besides, we just sold out."

I said, "But I can see lots of empty pillows right through there. Come on, dude. That pillow lifestyle looks sweet. My people live in rocky crevices among hard-shelled mussels or tucked between predatory anemones. We live in places so tight you'd think we were trapped. My own home is a large, empty barnacle shell under some coralline algae. We usually live near shore from Alaska to Northern California and over by Japan where the water is cold and the surf pounds. It's a rough existence, and we wouldn't have it any other way. But a little Pillowburg vacation sounds relaxing."

"Shove off, you filthy crab," said the guard. "That small left claw of yours is bad enough but your big right claw looks deadly."

I said, "I use my rather impressive and bumpy right cheliped, which is what you call a claw, mainly for blocking the entrance to my lair so predators like seagulls can't pull me out. We granular claw crabs feed on plankton, which we filter from the water using our feathered mouthparts. So, we aren't going to chomp anyone and we present no more risk than anyone else in Pillowburg. In fact, our species name inermis means 'unarmed.'"

"But you're a crab. You know how you people are — shifty and brutish." "No, we aren't. We are sophisticated romantics. My people live in pairs and engage in precopulatory courtship rituals that involve both touching and producing lovely — to us — scents. Then we release our larvae in January and February. We are lovers, not fighters. And my wife and I would like to, you know, do it in Pillowburg."

"Whatever," said the guard, "Frankly, that outrageous claw just makes it look like you are compensating for something."

"Well, I am compensating. I need this cheliped because I have a soft underbelly. I am a small but proud king crab. Some of us don't have an armored abdomen like most kinds of crabs. So, once a seagull gets past my right cheliped, I'm a succulent and nutritious bite. Gulls, like owls, hock up pellets of material they can't digest. So, our detached chelipeds, which are common on beaches where flocks of gulls rest, are probably all you Pillowburgers know of us."

"Did you just say you have a soft underbelly? Is ... is it ... pillow-soft?" asked the guard.

"Here, look. My abdomen is like a soft, fleshy, puffed-up disk. No hard shell, no spines, just a squishy cushion full of intestines, reproductive organs and other soft abdominal bits. Some people even call us 'the soft-bellied crab.'"

"Whoa ... Let me call my pillow guy. Hold on. Boss? Yeah, I got a granular claw crab here who — get this: He has a very soft, shall we say 'appealing' belly." The guard turned to me, "OK, crab, the boss says you can come in but you have to let him touch your belly. And you can't bring your wife."

I said, "You know what? Kiss my pillowy ass. I'll vacation in a cool place, like Humboldt County." ●

Vaden Earl Jantz Jr.

August 11, 1950 - June 19, 2022

Vaden Earl Jantz Jr. was born in Arcata on August 11, 1950 where he enjoyed a happy childhood with his three brothers and sister. But even as a child Vaden wanted to work! He realized his ambitions at age ten, milking cows at the Arcata Creamline Dairy across the street from his home on the corner of Zehndner and O st. In high school he helped in the kitchen of the Big 4 restaurant, a popular establishment at the time, and remembered fondly his cowboy experiences bucking hay and wrangling cattle in the hills around Humboldt county.

Sitting still at college didn't suit him so he went to work for the City of Arcata as an equipment operator, where for seventeen years he assisted in numerous water, wastewater and street projects. He was very proud of helping to create the now famous Arcata Marsh and upon his retirement from that job in 1987 was described by the members of the City Council as a "competent, loyal and dependable employee".

Vaden also served his local community for thirty three years as a volunteer and career firefighter for the Arcata Volunteer Fire Department. He was named Volunteer Fireman of the Year in 1975, where, according to an article in the Union newspaper, the selection was made on the basis of "attendance at fire calls and drills, enthusiasm and popularity".

After his retirement from the fire district in 2010, his help was eagerly sought by various civic and non-profit groups, including the town of Manila and the Friends of the Dunes.

Vaden enjoyed visiting family, fishing at Lewiston lake and far-flung travels with his wife Linda, but was a worker at heart. So he once again offered his help to the City, where his expertise and congenial spirit were happily welcomed by the small Environmental Services staff with whom he spent his last working years as a heavy equipment operator, maintaining the wetlands and the community forest.

Vaden was a kind and unassuming man who had no need to be in the spotlight. He was a keen observer of the world around him and had an intimate knowledge of nature, both animal and human.

Vaden died peacefully at his home in Arcata on June 19. Friends are invited to an informal indoor-outdoor celebration of his life at the Blue Lake Fire Department on Saturday, August 27 from 2-5 p.m.

HOPS IN HUMBOLDT

WELCOME!

QUICK TIPS

- Taps: Open from 2 to 6 p.m.
- Pours: They are small for a reason. If you sample every beer, that would equate to over 34 pints.
- Pace yourself.
- Lines: They look long because people get their sample, then hang out, drink and bullshit. Nicely ask them if they're in line. Most people will realize they're in the way and move.
- Lost or broken glasses: We don't give replacements and don't want to hear your sob story.
- Water: It's free ... drink it.
- No Refunds: Don't show up 15 minutes before taps close and complain you didn't get enough beer.
- Smoking: Only do it in the smoking areas.
- If you're drunk: DON'T DRIVE!!!

Please Drink Responsibly

Hops in Humboldt proudly partners with RTS to get people home safe. RTS offers bus service from McKinleyville to Fortuna. After the event several buses will be waiting to transport folks home safely on their routes...Bus fare is $3.50 each way.

HISTORY OF HOPS

The story started in 2003, when a small group of directors were trying to decide on a new event for Fortuna with a $1,000 grant provided by the Fortuna Business Improvement District. It took two years of planning, organizing and research. Fortuna Rotary and ESA offered to sponsor the event and Hops in Humboldt was born. The very first Hops event was held in 2004, in a small beer garden between the two playgrounds at Rohner Park. There were 10 breweries at best; all of our local breweries plus a few more from Northern California. It had a bluegrass theme with local bands and some random vendors. As the event progressed throughout the years more breweries were added. Mixed genres of music became the norm, the Hops beer games and the Hops awards were born. Local homemade food and vendors started to make the event more unique. Partnerships with transportation companies were formed to provide safe transportation alternatives for attendees. That year we saw elbow-to-elbow room only in the festival and it was evident the festival had outgrown its location. In year six Hops decided to make the move off the green grass of Rohner Park to a larger home and current location on Bartow Field. That year Hops also started the process of shedding its sponsors and led the paperwork to become its own nonprofit organization. With a board of directors and a dedicated beer-loving committee that works year-round, Hops in Humboldt is bigger and better than ever! Hops has proudly taken in hundreds of thousands of dollars in event income. The majority of our budget is put back into the community and spent with local businesses to make the event happen. 100 percent of the profits are given back to local groups each year who fall under our grant categories.

Where does the money go? So, you come to Hops, shell out $30-$100 to get in and there are thousands of people there. They sell Hops gear and have games. Who gets the money? Hops in Humboldt Inc. that's who. Most folks don't know but Hops is a registered 501c3 nonprofit corporation. We have a board of directors, bylaws, website and everything. Through a grant process we distribute our proceeds to a variety of Humboldt County organizations that fall within five categories: schools, youth activities, senior programs, municipal programs, and drug and alcohol prevention. Anyone falling within one of these five categories is welcome to submit a grant application to Hops. To date we have distributed over $500,000 in grants. Thank you for your support and sacrificing your sobriety in the name of community service!
